riters have frequently observed that foreign travel teaches a paradoxical truth. In the words of G. K. Chesterton, "The whole object of travel is not to set foot on foreign land; it is at last to set foot on one's own country as a foreign land." Ultimately the traveler learns not just to see his home with new eyes, but also to understand himself better as well.

This must be a familiar lesson to a poet as well-traveled as Chip Dameron, whose collectionWaiting for an Etcher seems to play out this realization. "Across the river is another version $\label{eq:continuous} ``-" \ \check{Z}``\ddagger \acute{a}\acute{o} \ "\ddagger \% ``\bullet - \check{S} \ddagger \ \eth ``\bullet - \ ``\ddagger \bullet$ ("Across"), immediately drawing at tention to the proximity of Dameron's
